An odor of roast beef, crisp and appetizing, permeated the North River front along the middle West Side to-day. Anon hoarse cheers from thousands of throats echoed back from the heights of Hoboken. Odor and cheers proceeded from Devery aPrk, at Twenty-ninth street and Thirteenth avenue, where the Devery barbecue to the 'longshoremen of the Ninth District was being

Butchers Go on Strike.

All night and all through the morning Frank Mertel, the expert butcher, kept watch on the revolving roasts. Early in the proceedings he had twelve butchers to assist him. With the arrival of daylight the small boys of the neighborhood flocked to the scene in swarms. They wanted to get close to the barbecue and the butchers drove them away Then they stoned the butchers, and the butchers drove them away Then they stoned the butchers, and the butchers took off their aprons and went on strike. They said it was Labor Day, anyhow.

Word of this untoward incident was, telephoned to Big Bill at Rocksway. He was all action at once. Telephoning to his friend Soi Levy, a butcher at No. 504 West Fortieth street, he ordered that twelve docile butchers not afraid of stones in the hande of small boys be sent to Devery Park without
